The event, entitled "Law in A Changing Society", was marked by the participation of twenty-three international researchers and included presentations on a variety of topics, each of which was moderated by an expert in the respective field. The event was organized by Mira S. Strohm, Ora Blum, and Avigdor Paus, doctoral students at the Center for Advanced Legal Studies of the Ben Gurion University.

Summary

On November 22-23, 2016, the fourth international seminar for young researchers in law took place at the Faculty of Law in the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. The seminar, which was attended by researchers from ten countries across the globe, was marked by a high level of academic and cultural exchange. The discussions covered a range of topics, including human rights, family law, international law, cyber law, cybercrime, and the relationship between society and law.

The event included a visit to the Supreme Court of Israel and a meeting with Judge Dafna Barak-Erez. The participants appreciated the opportunity to meet with their Israeli counterparts and enhance their understanding of the Israeli legal system.

The event was organized by Mira S. Strohm, Ora Blum, and Avigdor Paus, doctoral students at the Center for Advanced Legal Studies of the Ben Gurion University.
A Summary of the 4th Annual TAU Workshop for Junior Scholars in Law

The 4th annual TAU workshop for junior scholars in law, titled "Law in A Changing Society", was held on November 21-22, 2016 at the Buchmann faculty of law. From over 135 applications submitted, 29 promising junior scholars were chosen to present their research in the workshop. The participants came from 25 leading academic institutions and 11 countries around the world: Belgium, Britain, Canada, France, Hong-Kong, Hungary, Italy, Ireland, Israel, the Netherlands and the United States.

Each of the nine panels held during the workshop explored the interface between social and legal change in a different context: Law & history, intellectual property, family law & human rights, international law, cyber law, criminal law, law & the environment, economic regulation & corporate law, and law & ethics. Each panel included three or four presentations by participants, whose presentations were followed by a comment from a senior scholar in the relevant field.

A total of 27 respondents from 8 academic institutions around the country participated in the workshop. The respondents came from Tel-Aviv University, the Hebrew University, Bar-Ilan University, Haifa University, The Interdisciplinary Center Herzliya, Ramat Gan College of Law & Business, Sha'arei Mishpat Academic Center for Law & Science and Carmel Academic Center. The participants were very impressed by the time, thought and effort invested by all commentators and remarked on the importance of the comments for further developing their work.

The panel on cyber law, held during the first day of the workshop, included three presentations:

- Asaf Lubin from Yale Law School presented his paper "We Only Spy on Foreigners: The Myth Of A Universal Right To Privacy And The Practice Of Extraterritorial Surveillance ", to which Prof. Tal Zarsky from University of Haifa responded.

- Yang Liu from University of Hong Kong presented his paper "Reigning In Cyber Attacks: Sovereignty, Due Diligence and International Law ", to which Dr. Nimrod Kozlovski from Herzog Fox & Neeman responded.
• Roy van Keulen from Leiden University presented his paper "Cyber Attacks Against Critical Infrastructures", to which Dr. Eldar Haber from University of Haifa responded.

After the conclusion of the workshop, on November 23, participants were invited to attend a guided tour of Jerusalem that focused on religious sites in the city. The tour was followed by a tour of the Supreme Court and a meeting with Justice Daphne Barak-Erez. The participants enjoyed the tour and remarked on the fact that the workshop had really allowed them to meet and create meaningful connections with a group of diverse junior scholars from around the world. The meeting with Justice Barak-Erez was a perfect ending to the workshop, as she (like the commentators) was very generous in investing her time and thought into answering the participants’ questions on Israeli law and the Supreme Court, placing their questions on the Israeli legal system and legal developments in their specifically Israeli historical, social and cultural context.

The workshop's academic organizers were Mirjam Streng, Ora Bloom and Abigail Faust, Ph.D. Candidates at the Zvi Meitar Center for Advanced Legal Studies.
